פרשת בא Parashat Bo

4 Shevat, 5772/ January 28, 2012
Triennial Cycle Year II: Exodus 11:4-12:28
Humash Etz Hayim, page 379
Haftarah: Jeremiah 46:13-28, page 395

1. (11:4-10) Moses announces the tenth plague to Pharaoh, and the slaying of all the first-born of Egypt, but God hardens Pharaoh's heart and he does not respond to this final ultimatum.
2. (12:1-13) The Passover sacrifice in Egypt. The Israelites are commanded to take a lamb, slaughter it on the 14th of Nisan, at twilight, mark the doorposts of their houses with its blood, and eat the lamb on the eve of the 15th. On that same night, God struck down all the first-born of Egypt.
3. (12:14-20) Passover for the generations: The Israelites are commanded to observe this festival, the 15th of Nisan, for all time. For the entire seven days of the festival they shall not eat, or even possess, any leaven.
4. (12:21-28) Moses and Aaron convey the Passover commandments to the people.

A Lesson from One Letter

Rabbi Daniel Pressman

Moses said, "Thus says the LORD: Toward midnight [or "around midnight"] I will go forth among the Egyptians, and every first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, from the first-born of Pharaoh who sits on his throne to the first-born of the slave girl who is behind the millstones; and all the first-born of the cattle. (Exodus 11:4-5)

Moses knew [the exact moment of midnight, so] why did he say "around midnight"?* Moses thought that Pharaoh's astrologers might err and say, "Moses is a liar." [Rashi: "Though I know how to determine the exact hour, they don't know, and they might think it had arrived before it actually did, and the plague would not yet have begun, and so they would say 'Moses is a liar.' Therefore it is better to use the language of 'I don't know.'" For the Master said [that is, an anonymous Rabbi taught]: "Teach your tongue to say 'I do not know,' lest you be caught in a falsehood. (Talmud Berachot 4a)

The essential point about this reading is the precariousness of truth. The slightest of time-gaps—an error of milliseconds in the Egyptian calculation of mean time—will give them grounds to belie Moses' whole story. Although Moses, and certainly God, knows the precise moment of midnight, human language must engage with the approximations and not with the absolute. This is particularly true in speaking about time, where subjectivity is unavoidable. (In the narrative of the night of the plague of the firstborn, the word, bachatzi—"at exactly midnight" [12:29]—is used, to describe the absolute, divine measurement that is beyond human perception.)

The point is paradoxical, because elsewhere... the thrust of the narrative has been to demonstrate the exact and publicly witnessed fulfillment of God's foreshadowing, in time and place, and against all odds of improbability. Here, a contrary movement is held in focus: there is no way of absolutely preventing or repudiating the subversive narratives of Egypt. Moses avoids an arrogant exactness of prediction; he adopts a modest skepticism, which in the Talmud becomes exemplary: "Teach your tongue to say, 'I don't know.'" This motif, of the low cognitive profile, counterpointing the precisely articulated foreshadowings at other moments in the drama, does read strangely, in the context of the most manifest redemption in Jewish history. The human modesty recommended here takes account of the narratives and probable mis-narratives of others. (Avivah Zornberg, The Particulars of Rapture: Reflections on Exodus)

There are people who take pleasure in finding fault with others. They are experts at finding inconsistencies in what people say and do. It is almost impossible to meet their standards. Just as the Egyptians were able to call Moshe a liar—an extreme term—for what they considered to be a mistake, so too faultfinders use strong language to condemn and belittle their victims. They do this either because they are perfectionists or as a means of gaining power. Living with such a person can cause suffering, especially for someone who is very sensitive. Such a person must learn to find the good in what others do. Even if he is not able to master that wonderful trait, he still needs to develop a sense of proportion. If a person does something which is basically right and proper, acknowledge this even if you do point out the errors that still remain. Realize there is always the possibility that you are making a mistake. Then you will be much more gentle when you correct others. Because of the harm caused by this negative tendency, it is crucial to work on overcoming it. (Zelig Pliskin, Growth Through Torah)

* The Hebrew says k'hatzot, with a kaf, rather than b'hatzot, with a bet, which would mean "at midnight."
